to appear in court, and the case went over.

It was stated last night that Mate Choshire came aboard the tug, which was lying at Groner's wharf, in Atlantic City, in an intoxicated state and bad humor. He became engaged in an argument with the chief and assistant chief engineers, who left him and went below to avoid trouble. Cheshire went to the pilot-house, apparently to retire, but he soon made his appearance in the engine-room, and without warning, it is claimed, fired at the unarmed men, wounding each twice.

Davidson was shot in the right lung and knee, Algor received a bullet in his stomach and right side.
